Not only is Burdo guilty of the crimes, he said, but he let down the community by keeping Gebo's death secret and allowing the body to remain unburied for nearly a year.

Scozzafava wanted to wait for the five new members of the Board of Supervisors to take office.
"I still believe the best interest of the board would be to postpone this until January," he said.
"I believe the new supervisors should have some say in this."
"I think this is a decision of the seated board," Supervisor Teresa Sayward, R-Willsboro, said.
The real controversy was over whether Donaldson should be made to reside in Essex County.

think it's fair to ask them to sell their home and move 50 feet."
"We've had others who haven't lived here, but it hasn't been enforced," Supervisor Matthew Clark, R-North Elba, said.
Clark noted the county has a one-year grace period for newly hired workers to move within its borders. Since the requirement was waived for Donaldson, however, he won't have to move to Essex County at all.
Donaldson lives in the Town of Harrietstown in Franklin County, in the bi-county Saranac Lake Central School District, and he has a Saranac Lake postal address.

body, and Williams extracted and resuscitated the baby; relatives said she has some training in nursing.
It's unclear how much 8-year-old Joshua saw, but Birkett said, "With what this kid saw, you could call it torture."
Caffey's cousin, Terrence Forest, said Caffey called him at 3 a.m. Friday "and said he just had a son." Prosecutors said Williams, the mother of three children, had been pretending she was pregnant so she could claim the newborn as her own.

Investigators got their first break when a witness — someone they won't identify but apparently an acquaintance of Williams and Caffey — reported seeing and speaking to Joshua Evans in Williams' townhouse in Schaumburg, another northwest suburb of Chicago.
Police went to the townhouse Friday night, but Williams and Caffey were gone, possibly to kill Joshua and dump his body in an alley in Maywood, a suburb about 10 miles to the east. The two were arrested when they returned, and Ward was arrested later.

All three have long criminal records. Williams includes convictions for theft and forgery, and Caffey has been convicted of attempted theft, domestic battery and unlawful use of a weapon.
Ward was released from a prison work camp in January after serving a three-year sentence for striking a police officer while trying to enter the home of a former girlfriend.
Police described the short, slender Ward as a "ladies' man." One former girlfriend, Cynthia Aguilar, was granted two orders of protection and reported at least three violations.
